Chapter 1 by intellikat

A boy once lived in a tall apartment building in the crowded city. Because both of his parents worked all day long, he developed a very active imagination. Clouds became his playmates, and filled his head with stories. Days were never lonely then, except when the rain fell and blotted out the sky.

Chapter 2 by intellikat

Everytime it rained, however, the boy felt boredom settling in. Frowning, he would plop himself before the television set and watch daytime soaps. Growing up this way (in Scotland), his healthy imagination was quickly dulled. Halfway through university, he decided to become a tax accountant.

But he still thought he could be an author, if he tried. He remembered as a child, writing stories for his parents when they came home. They were all, every single one of them, put in a "story folder". Looking back on them, they weren't too bad.

Also, his favourite thing to do is go to the library and read all the story wars. He loved making up chapters. And he was quite good at it too. He would sit at his desk for hours on end, writing drafts.

He was given his imagination for a reason. He should become an author. But it took way too long for him to figure it out.

Chapter 4 by intellikat

I should have explained:

First sentence starts with "A",

Second with "B",

Third with "C",

And so on.

Chapter 5 by Sara_Of_Music

Is it too late, he always thought.

Just the way of life's most confusing paths.

Kites of color could be found flying in the sky by his apartment.

Like a story he had once created, he imagined what it was like to fly among the clouds.

Might he go on to become an author?

Never would his parents agree.
